

English students and the Wurzburg Residence

Because English students arrived, we had to say our name a whose exchange partner we are. It wasn't bad, they are nice.

Mr. Mantel showed us an information video about chain reactions. So... yeah, we had to do some chain reactions. So we did. We made it all forenoon.

Because Emma and I are friendly, we sat to our English friends. They weren't really excited, but they seemed so lonely.. WE were talking, but it was hard, cause my and Emma's English isn't as good as Englishman's. So sometimes we were just sitting, nodding and smiling.

We had program together like yesterday. Today, the plan was the Wurzburg Residence. We went inside with a guide and saw every room and all the enormous things. I'm not interested in history, but it was really interesting.

Emma was tired, so after the tour we went to her house. She showed me soap operas Supernatural and Gossip girl and then went to bed. I was tired too.

Lazy Thursday and old Wurzburg

On Thursday we did reactions again. Only reactions. Nothing more. Then lunch.

After lunch we had meeting in front of the school. Mr. Mars (history and German teacher) had a short talk about history of Wurzburg (with stuffed toys, pieces of paper, plastic bags and paper boxes. One endless lecture later we went more into Wurzburg.

We went into some churches and Mr. Mars told us the points of interest. He was showing some remarkable monuments and talking about interesting history maybe for two hours, but it was like whole day.

When we were going home by bus, Emma had asked me if I wanted to go with her to the balet. I don't know why, but I was really tired, so when we arrived, I just went to bed and slept.

Meanwhile Emma left and came back. We watched some Gossip girl episodes and then really go to bed. IT was a really tired day.

Rontgen, noodles and bowling

This morning we finished our chain reactions. Just the latest treatments. At about ten o'clock we went to a Rontgen-Memorial. It was a lecture about Wilhelm Conrad Rontgen. A lot of students said it was boring and they wanted to sleep. But I liked it. Really. It was maybe one hour, maybe one and a half, I'm not sure. We saw his tools and how he discovered it. It was something about science, something more and not just history.

After memorial, we had to meet forty minutes later at the station. We were hungry (Emma, Franziska, Kika and I), so we went at the station and bought Asian food there. Noodles.

We wanted to go climbing, but the weather was so ugly, that we went bowling instead. We traveled by train somewhere.. where was a good bowling center. Still with noodles. I couldn't eat them all! I gave some to Vojta. He was hungry.

We arrived somewhere and had to continue by bus. And I was still with my Asian noodles. It was really many noodles! We got in the bus and I gave up. I gave all my noodles to Vojta, cause I had no chance to eat them all.

When we arrived to the center, our teachers wanted us to have groups with English, German and Czech students, so (even that our group was english-german-czech) they remade
